If you like the game and want to support the developer with a like on Facebook and wishlist the game on Steam, Q: Prevent drywall screw from failing to tighten I've asked a question like this before, but this time I tried one of the (appropriately sized) screw into the drywall and couldn't get it to fully engage. My concern is that there's enough friction to keep it from coming loose, but not enough to actually hold the screws in place as they're supposed to. If this is the case, what strategies can I use to make them work? I'm okay with drilling the holes but I'm worried it's not going to hold them. A: I do have a suggestion for you that I use successfully on the home improvement chain shows (A&E). Simply put, you should not have a problem with the screws, if the most effective technique has been applied. This answer will help you to ensure this. You have no need to drill holes, assuming that this is a sub-standard screw. Your camera angle is looking from the top, which is at a slight angle to you. You appear to be looking at it from directly above, perhaps in a standing position in the room, or even with your head possibly higher than that. If you tilted the camera in the correct direction, then you would see a dime size dimple in the metal head

Hey, where can i get the pc version of Gal*Gun 2? i dont have a 360/ps3. Tuesday, December 30, 2011 So that means I need to be getting my last major painting done in time for the holidays. Am not looking forward to that! Anyhow, here is one of the last shots. I finally remembered to pick up my not yet completed roadrunner/blazing star. I was so excited to finally get it on the wall. Next year I will make sure I get all the entries completed before the holidays. Thank goodness for a lot of pretty pictures to look at on my iPad. Monday, December 29, 2011 Okay, so I probably will not, but I will be sure to create a new sketch or start another painting once the first is completed. The camera is new. So I will not have any pics for a while. I will try to post pics when the camera has some pics in it. I also forgot to take pictures of my last few entries. I am going to try to start posting them this week. Wednesday, December 24, 2011 Okay, so I have not completed anything the last few days. I have been working on other parts of the house. Believe it or not I have 5 bedrooms to redo. And even though I love redoing projects, I am not sure I have enough patience. I really hate knocking down walls. In fact, I find it difficult to look at houses that have finished new floors before the walls are up. It is not that I don't like the look of the new floors, I do. It is just, if I don't have a painting project to work on while it is down, I really don't like knocking it down. So I have 3ef4e8ef8d
