manCharacterization of cell surface glycoproteins by lectin-mediated radioimmunoassay using lectin-modified test tubes. A radioactive lectin-modified assay was developed for the characterization of cell surface glycoproteins on mammalian cells.

Lectins are selected which recognize cell surface-exposed oligosaccharides, and those which retain their capacity to bind to immobilized cells are selected from the latter group. This assay has been shown to be particularly useful for the characterization of cell surface glycoproteins on murine tumors. Monday, September 13, 2010 I am not a morning person. I start off my day, or really any day really, tired, sleepy and for some reason always grumpy. But somehow, on this Monday morning, I woke up feeling rather chipper. I have no idea why, but for some reason I was feeling more energized than usual. So far today, I have written and sent out all the mail, gotten some work done, watched a movie, made a batch of curry, had some chocolate, taken a shower, and washed a few dishes. It is now 10:30am and I am still in my pjs and going full speed ahead. Perhaps this was just a placebo effect, a side-effect of my new prescription, but I think I have some serious ADD. I should be ashamed. Oh well, I am not complaining. I am a big girl, and if I don't feel like doing something, I don't do it. If I don't feel like exercising, then I won't. If I don't feel like cleaning the kitchen, then I won't. I am quite content to do things as they come along and just enjoy life. I got my monthly box of AVEJ today. It is a huge collection of things that I have made or wanted to make. There was nothing new in it, but I was happy with it all the same. I always get a little tingle when I go through one of these boxes. It reminds me of the joy that comes with creating something from scratch. There is a sense of gratification in my heart as I look over all the materials that I need and choose the 2d92ce491b
