"Your site is such an extraordinary data source. ". And to create a collection in a subsequent, it's necessary to launch that collection from the /menus/menu.xml. Then, we want to generate an invisible node for the body of the node whose place we want to be in the list of collections, and the name we want to give to the collection. From that node we want to create a sequence of nodes which contain the collection. "So I'm working my way through /sections/section.xml. ". However, no one to whom we are giving a collection thinks it's a good idea. I find it to be a tedious process to go through /sections/section.xml. ". Yay, /elements. We've chosen collections and collections groups. Of course, you can also add a second type of group if you like. We need to generate a sequence of anonymous nodes which are invisible, but still contain elements. Of course, the name is going to be a collection group. After that, we just need to add all of the elements to the collection group. We want to write the elements in our own namespace, so we need to generate an XML document that contains our elements. However, that document has to come from somewhere, so we have to generate it from another XML document. This other document is going to be the body of the collection or collection group.
