Nurses and midwives in the USA: 1994-2004. To examine whether the employment status of nurses and midwives in the USA changed between 1994 and 2004, and to ascertain whether the type of health care institution that nurses and midwives work in has an impact on their employment status. An analysis of the US Current Population Survey data covering the years 1994, 1996, 2000, and 2004 was conducted. Data from individual surveys of nurses and midwives was extracted and analysed using descriptive statistics. The numbers of nursing/midwife staff employed in hospitals and in other settings (community health centres, nursing homes, etc.) also was analysed. The analysis revealed that the proportion of women employed in the health care industry has not increased significantly from 1994 to 2004, and the overall percentage of midwives' employment in the health care industry has actually decreased slightly. Nursing/midwife staff working in hospitals increased slightly, and the number of nurses and midwives working in the other health care settings has remained stable. The types of institution where nurses and midwives work are not significantly associated with the employment status of these health care professionals. Nurses and midwives are in many different types of institutions and this situation seems to have remained stable over the last few years.

Q: Apple's template for Universal apps A couple of weeks ago Apple announced a new iPhone-only iOS framework - Mobile UIKit. Although it was no surprise to me that they added support for iPhone, I was surprised when they mentioned that this new library will support iPhone, iPad and iPod Touch. According to Apple, they used to design their iPhone apps and templates so that all the pages will be displayed the same way for both small and large screens, without making changes to the templates and views. It was also stated that the way they design their templates and views were so flexible and easy to modify that anyone, 2d92ce491b
