The title compound, C(10)H(20), is linear, containing an enantiomerically pure cis-1,4-diphenylethylene moiety, which is itself a rare example of a C(2)-symmetric diphenylethylene ligand. The diphenylethylene fragments are bound to the two copper atoms through their phenyl and imine groups. Each metal center is chelated by a trans-1,4-diazabutadiene dianionic ligand. The most commonly used inositol is D-chiro-inositol (DCI) of formula I. [Chemical Formula 1] DCI is used for the treatment of various diseases. These include diabetes, 2d92ce491b
