It is a loose adaptation of the novel that is set in the aftermath of the first half of the Second World War. Set in a small town in France, it follows Lt. Aldo Raine and Lt. Shosanna Dreyfus, a Jewish woman who works for the Germans as an assassin and Lt. Col. Landa, an officer working for the Nazi regime. During a dinner party attended by several people, including Lt. Raine, a German soldier named Lt. Hans Landa challenges the colonels about the nature of war, and the justification of revenge against the Allies. As the talk turns to the massacre of the villagers in the Ardeche department, Lt. Landa and Lt. Raine both agree that this was a crime of "extermination". He believes that any who survive should be punished or killed, including the surviving witnesses, while Raine considers this "extermination" to have been done as a preventative action against "further atrocities" by the Allies. Lt. Raine continues to argue with Lt. Landa, who then pulls out a Luger pistol
